The country is agitated at present by the rival claims of aspirants for Presidential honors at the hands of the Democratic convention.

Each man has a candidate of whose availability he is certain and whose Democracy is unimpeachable. None but him can succeed.

Yet it is pleasant to find that all agree on the point that the nomine must be supported by all the party. There is no difference there. A close, active union is certain in any event, even should Chase receive the nomination.

This is as it should be. The issue is on principles, not men. The defeat of certain oppressive measures, the relief of the South, and the restoration of civil freedom, is the absolute need of the hour.

It is too important for minor issues to divide, and in fact there is no such division. The greenback question, while it tends to a difference, is found upon examination to really involve none.

Mr. Pendleton, the exponent of this policy, declares that certain bonds can be redeemed in legal-tender notes within a specified time without any additional taxation, and that it should be done.

It is contended, on the other hand, that all bonds of the United States, unless otherwise provided for, are payable in coin, and that no scheme to cancel them by any other form will amount to anything more than changing the form of the debt.

This looks like a difference, but upon examination, it will be seen that it is not. We do not understand Mr. Pendleton to affirm that any bonds, properly payable in gold, shall be paid in greenbacks. On the contrary, he holds tenaciously to the ancient idea that debts must be paid in the form contracted—gold for gold, greenbacks for greenbacks. He does not even affirm that five-twentieths are payable in legal-tender.

His argument is, if five-twentieths are decided to be payable at the option of the Government in coin or paper, the Government may and ought to pay in paper.

The advocates of Mr. Pendleton, less wise than their leader, assume, first, that five-twentieths are payable in greenbacks, and thereupon they make an issue which does not exist between Mr. Pendleton and the Hard-money Democracy.

We are not going to revive the discussion. We agree if the courts, upon examination, construe the act of Congress to leave it optional with the Government to pay in greenbacks or gold, that it would be wise to pay as many of the bonds as the currency will bear immediately in legal-tender notes.

Mr. Pendleton's scheme does not rest wholly upon the nature of the five-twentieths bonds. We have a debt of $400,000,000 represented by national banknotes. We have, perhaps, as much more payable by express stipulation in paper. All these are subject to the measures proposed by Mr. Pendleton, exclusive of the unsettled question of the five-twentieths.

The difference, then, is no difference. All Democrats agree that gold bonds should be payable in gold. If the five-twentieths are decided to be gold bonds, they assume the same footing as the ten-twentieths. It is only where national securities may be redeemed in legal-tenders that the greenback policy implies. The repudiation part is only a scheme of third-rate editors, who don't seem to know that a spurious currency falls on labor, not capital, of who do not care.

Upon this, the one question of opinion, when sifted down, there is, therefore, no difference. The issue is an unfortunate one, leading off from our old-fashioned bullion Democracy into a bastard paper Democracy; but we are glad to believe the question is now better understood, and that Democrats unite fully upon the platform adopted by the Kentucky Democracy.

Some such basis will be made the platform of the national party. It may concur to the advocates of the greenback policy the further agreement that all bonds not payable by express stipulation or fair construction shall be paid in greenbacks under Mr. Pendleton's limitations. We have no objection to this. We would not consent to an assertion that gold bonds, whether made so expressly or by fair construction, are payable in paper. We have no patience with those who, after selling bonds as gold bonds, would now dishonestly turn them into paper.

There is no possibility of the last. The greenback scheme, as represented by repudiators, is dead. Democrats, in the last six months, have been growing nearer together as they understand one another, and now agree generally. In no event could a dispute on the greenback policy make a division. More important questions overshadow it. We are to decide whether this shall be a people's Government or not. We are to decide whether the white people in the South shall have any rights a negro is compelled to respect. We are to remove and dispense with military pro-cessships altogether.

After we have restored the nation; lifted it from degradation, and encouraged the people to make a livelihood for themselves, we can talk about the secondary question of paying our bonds in paper, or repudiating them altogether. The time for that is not yet come. The best way to avoid it, to avoid repudiation and bankruptcy, is to make the country free. If Grant is elected, repudiation comes not from any party policy, but simply because the people will not be able to pay. We will quit paying because we have neither money nor credit. There will be no financial scheme about the matter.

The time for that is the Democratic nominee, he is necessarily the representative of those who honestly aim to pay. He will be supported by those who design to make the country free and able to meet its obligations. Hence the mere question of the man, whether it is Pendleton, Hancock, Hendricks, Seymour, or even Chase, is of less importance, and only derives importance from the availability of the men.

McFletcher, who backed Grant, doesn't like such backing. He cannot make it his money back.

Some New York gamins stole phosphorus and pocketed it. It burned up as hot as silver.

The undersigned will open a school in Grant & Butler's school building on Sixth street, between Main and Chestnut, on Monday, July 9. Applications will be received to enter the high schools, or into higher grades in the ward room, and to receive instruction in reading, writing, arithmetic, &c., to be given to all, and to be taught to a second examination, and others desirous of entering the school, to their advantage to attend. Terms—$10 in advance.
